FOUNDER'S DAY ADDRESS . . .

The Importance of Women

By DR. LOGAN WILSON

Vice-President of the University of North Carolina

October 5, 1951

Most of you have doubtless seen the amusing and pointed cartoon advertisements in one of the leading women's magazines under the standing caption, "Never underestimate the power of a woman." This would seem to be as self-evident as the admonition, "Don't defy the law of gravity." Yet prevailing misconceptions cause a surprisingly large number of people of both sexes to underrate the power and importance of women.

Rather consistently throughout history this misjudgment has held sway. Until fairly recently ours was a predominantly patriarchal society with women relegated to minor roles nearly everywhere except in the routine of household management. The talents of approximately one-half the human race have thus been erroneously appraised, neglected, and under-utilized. On the whole, women have been systematically excluded from many of the more important affairs of life, and until our era they meekly accepted the lot assigned to them. For those who felt otherwise there was little alternative. Although men tried to make partial amends through sentimental tributes in song and story, there was little doubt in their minds that male dominance stemmed from superior natural endowments.

I suspect that all through history this dominance has been more nominal than real, but it is only in recent times that women started doing something about it in an organized way. You young women gathered here this evening probably take many of your present rights and privileges for granted. Yet your mothers can recall the time when women did not have the right to vote. Your grandmothers did not have the same educational opportunities as your grandfathers, and so on. In short, the contemporary social, political, and economic status of women is of comparatively recent emergence.

Notwithstanding this progress, certain prejudices and erroneous ideas persist in the minds of both men and women. Whether for reasons of galantry or bigotry there are still a good many males, for example, who insist on treating females as the weaker sex. Too many women likewise accept this definition. Fortunately, the definition finds no place in the guiding principles here at Woman's College, and I am confident that most of you young women in this audience do not subscribe to it. To help counteract any anachronistic notions you may still have, however, let's take a look at a few of the biological and psychological facts, from the cradle to the grave.

To begin with the cradle, male babies are generally weaker and less likely to survive infancy than are females. Males have more hereditary defects. Throughout life they are more susceptible to serious diseases. To cap all of this they do not live as long as females. It is obvious, therefore, that the female of the species has the edge over the male in what counts most biologically—sheer survival ability. One cannot but conclude she must be the tougher sex!

Moreover, the prevailing idea that women are incapable of strenuous work is not borne out by all the facts. It is true that men are better for short and severe exertions of sheer physical power, but the typical middle and upper class division of labor in our society is by no means found everywhere in time and space. The American Indians assigned most of the really arduous manual labor to their squaws while the braves disported themselves spasmodically in hunting and warfare. Anthropologists report one primitive tribe where women carry the heaviest loads on their heads because of the belief that women's heads are harder. Among many peasant folk there is less difference in bodily stature and strength between the sexes than among ourselves because by custom and practice women are bred up to working alongside men. In other words, woman is apparently not by nature so delicate a creature as some suppose.

Or take the matter of emotional stability and mental aptitudes. Contrary to the notion popularly held about women being less able to stand strain, if hospital statistics be taken as a sole index (not a recommended procedure), then men appear to be more prone to mental disorders. Intelligence tests show that neither sex is superior to the other in general mental ability. There are certain differences in special aptitudes (boys generally better in mathematics, girls in linguistic facility), but these tend to balance one another.

In view of this scientific evidence I do not mean to suggest, as do some of the militant—and mistaken—feminists, that besides the obvious primary sex differences there are no other inherent differences of any importance. All I wish to point out here is that some of the differences are alleged rather than real, and many others are a matter of nurture rather than nature.

Furthermore, I believe that most women prefer to be in complementary rather than competitive roles with men. This is probably so today as well as in past eras. Regardless of what preferences may be, woman's place can no longer be just in the home. Until the last few years there was always a surplus of males over females; the 1950 census showed for the first time in our history a reversal of this ratio, and the present ratio may become even more pronounced in the future. This means that our society is likely to become progressively more feminized, and that the importance of women will have to be more generally taken into account.

The changed status of women must be reckoned with in a number of ways. First of all, it must be realized that the education of women is equally as important as that of men, and in some respects more important. Although young women are no longer barred from access to opportunities for higher education, there are still many parents who are more desirous of getting a good education for their sons than for their daughters. From the point of view of the general welfare such thinking is seriously in error. It may be an exaggeration to hold that the hand which rocks the cradle rules the world, but it is certainly true that women have major responsibility for the care and upbringing of the young. Hence, the next generation's character is essentially more in the hands of women than of men. If our way of life is to be carried forward, then we must see to it that women get the best education we can afford, not only for their own sake but also for transmission to their off-spring.

Another reason for stressing the higher education of young women is that most of them are exempt from the combined vocational and military pressures which shorten the period of general education for males or which result in premature specialization. If, therefore, the higher of education of women is not increased, we are in danger of a deterioration of much that is best in our cultural heritage.

This leads to my next point. With the threat of another global war looming, older men as well as younger men are increasingly drawn out of those occupations and avocations not directly technological. This means that more and more women must be trained to fill these gaps. At Woman's College, you are fortunate, therefore, in attending an institution which combines opportunities for both liberal and vocational education.

Now more than ever before we must make the most effective possible use of our woman power as well as man power. The chief resources of any nation are its human resources, and our nation's future in this troubled world depends in the final analysis upon our human superiority. We must recognize that more than one-half of our so-called manpower really consists of woman-power, and that failure to use it to the fullest extent could lead to national disaster.

A final point I want to make is this: whereas men are still dominant in the occupational and political world, in many other areas of life it is women who assume the major responsibilities. On the whole, men are so preoccupied with their vocations that carrying on in other spheres is by default, if for no other reason, the lot of women. Production may be mainly in the hands of men, but consumption is determined largely by women. Look around you at the churches, schools, civic and social clubs, welfare organizations, study groups, and the like. What do you see? In churches the bulk of the congregations and lay workers are women. Our grade schools have predominantly feminine staffs, and by and large women run the parent-teachers associations. Aside from luncheon clubs, the majority of our civic organizations not devoted strictly to business are kept going by women. Community chests, cultural organizations, and other activities of this sort depend heavily on their women workers. Even in political life, the only non-partisan organization of any continuing consequence devoted solely to better government is the League of Women Voters.

In other words, where community well-being and betterment are concerned it is largely women who do most of the work. We must see to it, accordingly, that young women get an adequate education for the varied and responsible roles they have to play. Women in turn must be more keenly cognizant of their duties and opportunities, and especially is this to be urged upon college women.

Most of you come from and will return to social strata where you will have a wide range of challenges to your ability. I hope that you will use your potential power and will rise to these challenges. It seems to me that middle and upper-class young women, especially in the South, need to guard against narrow misconceptions of their roles. In this highly competitive and insecure world of ours there is no longer any place for people who are merely ornamental. Yes, it is still worthwhile to be a lady if you can, or ladylike if you cannot, but all of this is entirely secondary to the importance of being a woman and a useful member of society.

In conclusion, I am confident you will live up to your privileges and responsibilities. Let me remind you and all others that it is perilous to ignore the law of gravity or underestimate the power of women!

A Letter from the Alumnae President

Dear Alumnae:

News of the plans for our Alumnae Fund has made the rounds and already many of us are thinking about and talking about our hopes and our plans for the College.

This is our first planned opportunity to express our gratitude to the College, but it is more than an opportunity to express our gratitude. It is an opportunity to keep our education a living, growing thing. Whatever we do for the enrichment of college life will live on and on in the lives of our daughters and our granddaughters. Even though the State has provided generously for the essential needs of the College, there are still many things which need to be done and for which the College needs money. Just think what 26,000 of us can do for Woman's College if we all contribute! Let's make our gratitude and our education living things!

Sincerely yours,

Inquire Shaw Swain

President of the Alumnae Association.

MIDWINTER BUSINESS MEETING

As the ALUMNAE NEWS goes to press, plans for the Midwinter Business Meeting of the Alumnae Association Saturday, December 8, include a luncheon at the Alumnae House at 12:30, followed by the business meeting. Mrs. Louis Hall Swain, president of the Alumnae Association, will preside.

Mr. William Aycock, professor of law at the University of North Carolina, who went with Dr. Frank Graham on the United Nations Mission to Pakistan and India, will be the guest speaker. Alumnae will also enjoy hearing from Chancellor Graham.

Other special guests at the luncheon will be Mrs. E. K. Graham, wife of the Chancellor; Mrs. William Aycock (Grace Mewborn '39), and Mr. and Mrs. William Friday of Chapel Hill. Mr. Friday is assistant to President Gordon Gray.

The report of the Nominating Committee will be given by Miss Mary Elizabeth Barwick '44, chairman. The report from the Alumnae Fund Committee will be given by Mrs. Herbert Falk (Louise Dannenbaum '28), chairman.

A full report on the meeting will appear in the February ALUMNAE NEWS.

THE EMILY AUSTIN LOAN FUND

Establishment of a new loan fund at Woman's College by Miss Emily Austin of Tarboro, has been announced by Mrs. Kathleen Hawkins, Student Aid Officer. The check for $100 as a beginning fund was received in October. Preference will be given to Edgecombe County applicants.

Miss Em Austin, one of the most loyal of Woman's College Alumnae, came to the College in 1897. After she completed her course she remained at the College as secretary to Dr. McIver until 1903.

For 37 years prior to her retirement in 1944 Miss Austin was with the Carolina Telephone and Telegraph Company in Tarboro and was assistant secretary and treasurer of the Company for eighteen years.

She is a very familiar figure at Woman's College, having missed very few Founder's Day Exercises and Commencements since she left the College. It has been said often, "Miss Em is here. Now we can begin the Commencement activities."

The Emily S. Austin Loan Fund carries with its name all the love and loyalty and devotion of the generous donor.

representative; Catherine Speight, Rocky Mount, Commercial Class representative; Miss Ione Grogan, an administrative representative; Glenna DeWitt, Greensboro, Senior Class president; Miss Annie Petty, First Librarian, and Miss Mary Petty, Greensboro, formerly head of Chemistry Department; Chancellor Edward K. Graham, and Dr. W. C. Jackson, former chancellor.

Miss Ruth Fitzgerald

the trees. Then Ruth did something inexplicable to her even now when she recalls how timid she was: she left the women, went outside the house, and stood as close to Dr. McIver's elbow as she could. When presently she was introduced to him, he asked, "Ruth, how old are you?" "Twelve," she answered. "Well, in four years," he continued, "You will be old enough to come to Greensboro to the Normal. Will you promise me that you will come?" "Yes," she replied with a new and strange assurance.

Four years later she kept her promise. Her financial problem had been solved by Mr. T. B. Bailey in a scholarship which he had recently set up in memory of his two daughters, who died during the typhoid epidemic. In return for her expenses Mr. Bailey asked only that she write him once a month and tell him how she was getting along and how the new normal school was progressing.

From this point on, Miss Fitzgerald's life was one of continuous service to Woman's College. When she was graduated after four years, she returned to assist in the Demonstration School and remained as a teacher for forty-five years. She had a leave of absence for two years while she studied for her bachelor's and master's degrees at Teacher's College, Columbia University. By successive stages she was promoted from assistant to full professor, holding the latter rank for twenty-four years. Her work was the training of elementary teachers: as a supervisor in the Demonstration School for nineteen years, and as a teacher of college classes for teachers and principals in service, and in summer sessions for ten years she conducted clinics for experienced teachers.

In recognition of her superior leadership in education she was the representative of the Consolidated University in 1940 to study with the National Teacher Education Commission at the University of Chicago. She served on numerous college committees and was a member of the first Administrative Council of the Consolidated University. She held membership in a dozen or more educational organizations, national and international, was the president of two, planned conventions, spoke at meetings and did yeoman service on many committees. She is a member of two honor societies—Kappa Delta Pi and Delta Kappa Gamma. Of the latter society she is the state founder and a former state president.

This professional record, however, gives an inadequate picture of Miss Fitzgerald's real service to the College and to the State. It was in the classroom that her powers found their chief expression. She was above everything else a teacher—a dynamic teacher. She knew the transforming power of adventures of the mind, of ideals discovered and fiercely maintained, of an intellectual grasp of personal and civic problems; and she was never satisfied until her students shared her insight and enthusiasm. Teaching was to her the greatest occupation on earth. By every conceivable means she sought to make her students perceive the dignity and the joy of showing boys and girls the path to the good life. She studied, she traveled, she visited other schools, she gave long hours of counsel to individual students—all in order that she might send forth skilled and eager young teachers.

In an article, "The Teacher's Place in War Time," her concluding words are these: "In the years of peace that will follow the war, when the teachers of America are asked, 'What did you contribute toward our victory?' each can answer with confidence and pride, 'I was a teacher.'" The many students who were led to that high affirmation by Miss Fitzgerald will be glad to know, that, though she retired from active teaching in 1950, she is still speaking before educational groups and writing for those who teach.

Alumnae Staff Adds Two New Members

Miss Tempe Hughes '51, and Mrs. Betty Perry Kirk, com. '31, have been added to the Staff of the Alumnae Office this fall. Miss Hughes assumed her duties November 1, and Mrs. Kirk came November 15. They will work with Betty Brown Jester, Alumnae Secretary, and Evon Welch Dean, her assistant, in carrying on the increasing activities of the Alumnae Association.

As a student last year, Tempe was editor of the Carolynian and a member of Golden Chain, honorary organization, and Phi Beta Kappa. For the five months since her graduation, she has been at her home in Myrtle Beach, S. C., where she was assistant editor of the Myrtle Beach Sun. She is the daughter of Jessie (Green) Hughes '13 and the sister of Billie Hughes, member of the present sophomore class.

Mrs. Kirk lives in Greensboro, and prior to coming to the Alumnae Office, was secretary at Truitt Manufacturing Company. She has three daughters, Curry Ann 10, Rebecca Jean 8 and Susan Perry 5. Her husband was killed in a plane accident in 1946.

With the additional help in the office, it is the hope of the staff that address files can be brought up to date, communications answered promptly, and additional service rendered to the Alumnae and the College.

Meeting of East and West in China

SUBJECT OF SOCIAL SCIENCE FORUM

A controversial issue, "The Meeting of East and West in China," spearheaded the theme of the forum and round table sessions of the Fifth Harriet Elliott Social Science Forum at the Woman's College November 15, 16, and 17.

Leading the distinguished cast of speakers was Dr. Hu Shih, Chinese diplomat and scholar. Other authorities on the East included Derk Bodde, professor of Chinese studies at the University of Pennsylvania; Harold Isaacs, veteran correspondent of the Far East; and Vera Micheles Dean, research director for ten years of the Foreign Policy Association.

Dr. Hu, Chiang Kai-shek's former ambassador to the United States for Nationalist China, was educated at Cornell and Columbia Universities and has been a teacher and administrator in Peking and Kwang Hua Universities. He is considered the father of the Chinese literary renaissance and is delegate to the United Nations and UNESCO for the de jure government of China. The Chinese scholar, author of many books and articles, is the recipient of thirty-three honorary degrees from universities in the United States, England and Canada.

Dr. Bodde, educated at Harvard, Yenching and Leyden, wrote Peking Diary: A Year of Revolution while studying in China on the first Fulbright scholarship. Seven months of his stay he was under the Chinese Communist regime. During the war, Dr. Bodde worked both in OSS and OWI as a specialist on China.

Harold Isaacs, veteran journalist, is the author of Tragedy of the Chinese Revolution, No Peace for Asia, among other books. He was a 1950 Guggenheim Fellow and is a lecturer at the new school for Social Research and Harvard. Mr. Isaacs has been an associate editor of Newsweek.

Mrs. Dean, who had previously taken part in a Social Science Forum, has been a lecturer at the University of Paris, author of The United States and Russia and other books. She was an American delegate to the Institute of Pacific Relations Conference in Lucknow, India, where she shared the speaker's platform with Prime Minister Nehru.

Dr. Hu introduced the Forum Thursday night with a discourse on "The Cultural Impact" in China. Dr. Bodde was chairman of the forum on "Political Tensions Between East and West," Friday morning.

The topic, "Russia's Influence in the East," over which Harold Isaacs presided, drew the largest audience Friday night.

Mrs. Dean served as chairman of the discussion on "Can There Be rapprochement Between East and West?" Saturday morning.

Round tables were in session Friday afternoon in the Alumnae House, the Library Lecture Hall and the Home Economics Lecture Hall.

New feature of the Forum this year was that a student committee was a part of the planning group from the initial stages. Skits were put on in the residence halls and particular emphasis was placed on poster and Carolinian publicity.

Campus chapters of the Students for Democratic Action and National Students Association jointly sponsored a preliminary program in the Library lecture hall to challenge student thought. Dr. Eugene Pfaff, history professor and Forum chairman, posed questions pertinent to the East-West relationship and then opened the floor to the students.

Of the seventy-five colleges and universities invited to attend the Forum, nineteen were represented from North and South Carolina, Florida, Louisiana, Maryland and Virginia. An estimated average of two thousand attended the Aycock talks.

The Forum committees were faculty, headed by Dr. Pfaff, and student with Joan Wrenn Knaupp as chairman. Other members were: faculty, Miss Edna Arundel, Dr. Albert Keister, Dr. Polly Duffy '25, Mr. Glenn Johnson, Miss Merib Mossman, Dr. Warren Ashby, Miss Lyda Gordon Shivers, Miss Ione H. Grogan '13; student: Glenna DeWitt, Ann Whittington, Peggy Hull, Ann Snead, Ruth Rawlins, Mary Agnes Tola, Nancy Witherspoon, Dorothy Kendall, Harriett Hall, Helen Hammond, Zita Spector, Patricia Marks, and Marilyn Robinette.

168 Students Enrolled For Extension And Graduate Work

Woman's College is reaching more mature students this fall in its extension and graduate courses than at any time in recent years, according to records compiled by C. W. Phillips, Extension Director, and Dr. F. H. McNutt, Associate Dean of the University Graduate School.

Extension courses are now in progress in Asheboro, Lexington, Reidsville, and Yadkinville, with 168 students enrolled, all of whom are in public school work. The classes range in size from 25 to 38 members. Two classes are in operation in Reidsville.

The Saturday morning graduate classes are attracting a record number of students, many from considerable distances. There are 258 enrolled in the 11 courses, many of them principals and other school administrators. All have their sights set on higher academic degrees and enlarged preparation for school work.

Extension studies now underway embrace reading in primary grades, audiovisual education, supervision, biography for teachers, and science in the 12-year program, taught by Miss Elizabeth Ann Liddle, Miss Edith Huffman, Dale Keller, Dr. Anna Joyce Reardon, Mrs. Mary A. Hunter, Dr. E. E. Pfaff, and Dr. A. D. Shaftsbury.

The Saturday program includes field study and directed business practices taught by Dr. Vance Littlejohn, a teaching seminar by Dr. Rowena Wellman, educational guidance by Dr. Philip Weaver, a reading clinic by Miss Huffman, secondary school organization and administration by Mr. Herbert Vaughan, cultural comparisons by Dr. Pfaff, philosophy of education by Dr. McNutt, rural social problems by Mr. Glenn Johnson, modern literature problems by Dr. Leonard Hurley, and directed reading by Mr. James W. Painter.—A. A. Wilkin-son.

The Student's Responsibility in the World Situation

by DR. RICHARD BARDOLPH
Assistant Professor of History

Speech delivered by Dr. Bardolph at the Pre-School Conference, September 1951

I am going to take the liberty of assuming that by "The Student's Responsibility in the World Situation" we do not mean merely her obligation in the present immediate international crisis. For if we did so confine our discussion there would be little to say, really, beyond the observation that the student's responsibility in the world situation is to survive it: you owe that to yourself, your family, your college, and the world. Beyond that I should not know what to say. Surely you do not have the responsibility of preventing it: it is here; and I think it rather plain that if the world is going to come out of this fearful crisis we may assume that the engines of its deliverance are already moving toward that end and those who direct them are not looking to college students for their charts and mandates.

Let us agree then, if our discussion is to be relevant and fruitful, that we are concerned here with the responsibilities of the student as a world citizen; or, to preserve more of the original wording, "the student's responsibility in the world context." Now the very first concept that is called up in my mind by that topic is the idea that the student's responsibilities include first the ordinary obligations of the citizen generally, but in addition they include the extra responsibilities that rest upon the educated citizen, plus still further obligations peculiar to the student.

I suppose we may skip over the responsibilities of the general citizen and pass on at once to those of the educated citizen and particularly those of the college student. I am certainly not going to try in five or six minutes to exhaust the subject (like the undergraduate who was going to write a five-thousand word theme on the "nature of the universe in infinite time and infinite space," and then, if she found she had not used up the required five thousand words would simply pad out the essay a bit by repeating a few points for emphasis and enlarging upon them.) I should like to concern myself only with principals and to throw out a few suggestions, leaving specifics to discussion from the floor.

Let me observe first that in a democratic world order as in a democratic national or local order (or a democratic student body, for that matter), there are those who follow and those who lead. In this sense, all men are not created equal. Jefferson himself, the patron saint of the American democratic cult insisted time and again upon the indispensability of an elite—an aristocracy of mind and character—and aristocracy open to all who have the heart and mind to enter it. And, let us not deceive ourselves, men being what they are, this elite will at least so far as we can foresee, always be a minority and the majority will be followers. But, and here lies the great peril, the mass will not necessarily follow the line marked out by an aristocracy of mind and character, unless that leadership is bold, wise, responsible, and competent; failing that, the masses will turn to other leaders. We have seen in our time, notably in Germany, to what a pass the treason of the intellectuals can bring a people. The masses need leadership and they will have it; we will never see the day when America or any other state has become the nation of philosopher kings that Utopians have dreamed of. The mass mind will accept the terms laid down by its leadership; leadership in large degree creates the standards of the Zeitgeist; it defines the basic goals and the means of their achievement; it creates in large measure, by precept and by example, the moral climate in which a people live. This degree of receptivity is a terrifying thing, and only so long as the leadership is sound and responsible can our civilization be secure. It is not necessary, you know, for a man to understand before he believes. There is hardly a person in America who doubts the validity of the germ theory of disease or the reality of atomic fission; yet scarcely one in a thousand fully understands the former or one in a hundred thousand the latter. The word simply goes out from those whom men are prepared to accept as leaders in such matters; and then the word becomes flesh and dwells among us.

Now the student's relationship to this elite—this aristocracy of mind and character—is clear. His opportunities are great and his responsibilities are in proportion. A great number of students spurn the opportunity and by that token betray the responsibility. Too often they take the comfortable position that they are too young, that they are entitled to exemption from these harassing matters while they enjoy their youthful birthright. I hear that all the time, even from my older colleagues. I never hear that attitude expressed but I think of the words written by the wisest of men, written, by the way, when he was an old man:

"Remember now thy creator in the days of thy youth, before the evil days come and the years draw nigh when thou shalt say I have no pleasure in them." Youth is the time for consecration, when the capacity for enthusiasm is undiminished, when the faculty for forming passionate attachments and magnificent indignations has not yet been jaded by disappointment, corroded with the fatigues and cynical attrition of outrageous fortune. Indeed, I often think that it is precisely this matter of procrastination, this lack of a sense of peril until we are in the very clutch of catastrophe, that is to blame for the numberless disasters that mankind in his blindness has pulled down upon himself.

The story is told that Satan, the Prince of Perdition, once determined to launch a month-long, all-out campaign to drag the people of earth to hell. He called his devils about him and announced that the supreme honor of directing the crusade would be entrusted to that fiend who would contrive the most effective strategy for achieving the end. When the time came for the candidates to appear, only three presented themselves. The first was called upon to describe his plan and he replied, "I propose to build the campaign around a single concept. I will repeat and repeat and repeat, louder, and louder and louder, that there is no heaven." "No," said Beelzebub, "that won't go over at all." The second proposed to pin his faith on the slogan "There is no hell." That was better, said the devil, but it still wouldn't stick. And then the third candidate smiling blandly, announced that he planned to sell the idea that "There is no hurry." Of course he got the job.

What better time than now—here in college—will you ever find for preparing yourself to assume the responsibility of the educated citizen? Surrounded by books and scholars, newspapers, scholarly journals, forums, lectures, a rich curriculum, now is the time to assume this adult role, this challenging responsibility. A generous people have released you for four years from the treadmill of the workaday world to permit you to devote your full energies to the acquisition of the resources of mind and character that the world so desperately needs. The student—particularly the woman student—who serves that apprenticeship faithfully makes the world forever richer.

Now, it is more than factual knowledge that is implied here. Of course you will need some smattering of the facts about world trade and resources, governmental systems, diplomatic rivalries, national economies and the like. The alert student will gather that information from classroom and textbook, from newspaper and magazine, lecture and radio broadcast.

But more important than this information is the study of the values to which our civilization is committed and an appraisal of their alternatives. Nor can this study of the public virtues be divorced from a deep concern for the private virtues, for no man can assist at the establishment of order in the world until he has established some semblance of order in himself. And having pondered and dedicated himself to the true and the just, to the real and the enduring—having studied, one might say the New York Times and the universal eternities—the good citizen familiarizes himself with the great streams that have watered our civilization — Greek and Roman culture, Judaism and Christianity, the Anglo-American democratic evolution. For no one who has not examined the roots and branches of our civilization will know how to preserve its fruits. Only a few months ago a prankster in Madison, Wisconsin (a great university town if you please) circulated a document made up wholly of excerpts from the Declaration of Independence, the basic scripture of the American Democracy, and he could not find five men in a hundred to endorse it; the paper was as foreign to them as a Chaldean tablet. They shrank from it as from a Moscow handout.

The great institutions of liberal western civilization were never more in need of vigilant defense than they are now. The dignity of the individual person, the right to freedom from every tyranny over the human mind, the principle that the author of injustice is in more pitiable case than his victim, the maxim that the man of deceit and cruelty destroys his own soul, the priority of principle over instance, these values that define the good life are under fearful attack. I cannot believe that they would long be menaced if there were a return to the old moralities, the old truths, the old loyalties. And I cannot believe that they can long outlast the siege if we do not return to first principles. I faithfully believe that America's hope and the world's hope rest with America's educated youth under God. I say "under God" because I would be false to my deepest allegiance did I not say with the preacher who was king in Israel, "Except the Lord build the city they labor in vain who build it; except the Lord keep the city, the watchmen watch in vain."

DR. McIVER QUOTED

The Ladies Home Journal, October 1951, front cover carries the following quotation:

EDUCATE A WOMAN AND YOU
EDUCATE A FAMILY
—Charles Duncan McIver

These famous words of the Founder and First President of Woman's College give particular significance to the Journal for all Alumnae.

Mrs. Williams Recalls Early Days at Woman's College

by VIRGINIA TERRELL LATHROP '23

"Low aim, not failure, is a crime." Mrs. Anna Meade (Michaux) Williams, Class of '96, reads this quotation from one of Dr. McIver's lectures, recorded in the yellowing pages of notes made 59 years ago at State Normal and Industrial College.

On the fifth of October, 59 years ago a young teacher in the public schools of North Carolina enrolled at the newly-opened State Normal and Industrial College at Greensboro.

Anna Meade Michaux thus became a charter student of the Woman's College of the University of North Carolina, a distinction that is an increasing source of pride to her as the years pass, and as each anniversary of the founding of the college comes around for celebration.

Anna Meade Michaux was married in 1914 to the Rev. J. S. Williams and moved to Asheville where she continues active participation in community affairs. She is one of the few charter students who still returns to the college and takes part in alumnae affairs; one of the few who remember the opening of the college, the difficulties of organization during the first months and years, the inspiration of the early members of the faculty, and the determination of the young Charles Duncan McIver to make higher education for the women of North Carolina a success.

Mrs. Williams was one of 223 students that morning of October 5, 1892. She had come, as had most of the others, from small, ungraded schools which she had attended as her father, the Rev. R. R. Michaux, was moved about to North Carolina Methodist churches. She was born in Granville County, not far from Oxford, but in 1892 was in Greensboro, living in the home of an uncle. A chance conversation with a guest in the home unfolded the possibilities of the college about to open on the outskirts of town.

designed to train teachers for the schools of the State.

Teaching had always been the ambition of young Anna Meade, who had found little opportunity for formal schooling. With her grandmother she had studied Latin grammar and read Caesar. She had some mathematics, but no science. She had read many of the classics but had no instruction in how to teach.

When she applied for admission that first day she found a state of confusion about classification. She was registered as a freshman, a sophomore and a junior, as were many of the others, for the academic background of all of them was spotty.

Then, with the opening of the "Normal" doors, she had the opportunity to study with a group of distinguished teachers: Dr. Edwin A. Alderman, whose English classes soon overflowed the space provided in the Administration Building, and who became president, in turn, of the University of North Carolina, Tulane University, and the University of Virginia; Dr. Dixie Lee Bryant, graduate of Massachusetts Institute of Technology, whose field was science; Dr. P. P. Claxton, pedagogy; Miss Viola Boddie, young, pretty and wearing such fashionable clothes that often the student's attention wandered from the Latin she had at her finger tips.

There was Miss Gertrude Mendenhall, the quiet, gentle Quaker who opened to the young ladies a new world of mathematics; Dr. Anna M. Gove a tiny New England woman who had dared to study and practice medicine, and whose lectures on physiology were startlingly novel; Dr. J. Y. Joyner, later to become State Superintendent of Public Instruction, who, in a low quiet voice brought Shakespeare alive for them. There was Miss Sue May Kirkland, the Lady Principal whose dignity, graciousness and social discipline opened vistas that the students sometimes thought closely bounded by gloves and hats and calling cards.

There was, finally, Dr. McIver, the young man who lived and taught and preached education for women.

All of these, and more, Anna Meade and the other students studied with, and did not know, as they wrote rapidly in their notebooks from the lectures, which Mrs. Williams says teachers today could profit by, that they were making educational history.

Mrs. Williams still has the notebooks she filled that first year. They are turning brown but they are not dusty, for she keeps them on the bookshelves in her living room and can find quickly the notes from Dr. Claxton's class in pedagogy, with one sentence underlined:

"Twenty-five pupils constituted the first Normal School in New York; two hundred and twenty-three the first one in North Carolina!" Another from the same course, "Teachers are the seed corn for the next generation." There are notes from Dr. Joyner's lectures, Dr. McIver's, Dr. Gove's.

All of the notes are in a firm, clear handwriting that testifies to the emphasis of the day on penmanship, and there is an eagerness about the full pages that shows the inspiration she was receiving from the pioneer faculty.

"Low aim, not failure, is a crime," she recalls as one of Dr. McIver's favorite quotations to the girls at the daily chapel service; and "The man who seeks one thing in life, and but one, may hope to achieve it before life is done." Or, so often, he read or spoke from the 13th Chapter of First Corinthians, "When I was a child I spake as a child . . . but when I became a man I put away childish things."

Mrs. Williams recalls clearly the impact of the dynamic personality of Dr. McIver on everyone he came in contact with. She remembers particularly one hot summer school session, when most of the lectures drew but a handful of listeners. Dr. McIver was scheduled at noon, the hottest hour of the day, yet students crowded to his lectures, and he told them, waving a palm leaf fan and walking impatiently up and down the platform, his collar wilted and a handkerchief tucked around it, that the State must provide higher education for women, that women must be prepared to teach and there must be taxation to pay for it.

"Above all," Mrs. Williams repeats, "Dr. McIver had a vision and a purpose, to equip women for life with education and to him it was God-given mission."

Mrs. Williams remembers the first day at the College, when Dr. McIver, with his unbounded energy, met every student at the railway station and saw her safely to the campus. She remembers the homesickness, the tears of many of the girls who had come in those days when transportation was not simple. She remembers the raw plaster in the two buildings and the lathes the girls climbed over to get into the Administration Building.

Leaving the College in 1894, her notebooks filled with information and instruction, she joined the faculty of the Greensboro Public Schools and taught there for 12 years. She then returned to the College, on the staff of the Curry Training School where she taught the first grade and where, as part of the extension work of the College, was the first rural elementary supervisor in the State.

After her marriage to the Rev. Mr. Williams, who was pastor of the Methodist Protestant Church which later combined with Hillside Methodist and formed the nucleus of the present St. Paul's Methodist Church, and who later became Chaplain of the Good Samaritan Mission, she entered into the civic life of Asheville in club and church work. She served as chairman of the Social Service Department of the State Federation of Women's Clubs, and organized the first Buncombe County Chapter of the Woman's College Alumnae Association. She helped to organize and served as president of the State Primary Teachers' Association. During the First World War she returned to teaching, and served in the emergency at Queen Carson School. WOMAN'S COLLEGE ALUMNAE PLAY LARGE PART IN NEW ROWAN LIBRARY BUILDING

Shown above are the members of the Board of Trustees of the Rowan County Library. Seated left to right: Mrs. W. D. Kizziah (Rosalie Wiley '28), building committee chairman; Mrs. Claude Morris (Emma Lewis Speight '00), chairman; Mrs. Clifford Peeler. Standing left to right: Mr. Yorke Peeler, Mr. J. H. Knox, Mr. E. L. Hardin, Mr. P. K. Dry, Mr. James Freeman, Mr. Leo Wallace, Mr. Charles Erwin (husband of Muriel Barnes '22) was absent when the picture was made.

The influence of Woman's College through her alumnae on life in the communities of North Carolina was demonstrated when the new Public Library of Rowan County in Salisbury was dedicated October 4. Several persons responsible for the new building are alumnae of Woman's College; the style of architecture follows that of the Alumnae House; the first selection of books was made up from a list prepared by a Woman's College professor; and the first group to meet in the new meeting room of the Library was the Rowan County Chapter of Woman's College Alumnae.

Mrs. Claude Morris (Emma Lewis Speight '00) is chairman of the Board of Trustees; Mrs. W. D. Kizziah (Rosalie Wiley '28) was chairman of the Building Committee; Miss Edith Clark '30 is the Librarian; and Mrs. J. S. Henderson (Moffitt Sinclair '16) and many other alumnae have been actively responsible for the new building.

As chairman of the Board of Trustees, Mrs. Morris presided at the dedication. Speaking of the planning of the new library, Mrs. Morris says, "Having been President of the Alumnae Association in 1936 when the Alumnae House was being built and the furnishings planned, it was easy for me to see the possibilities of adapting this style for a homey, traditional type of library which the donors, trustees and others, felt suited Salisbury." She continued, "I found I had absorbed much, sitting in with the Alumnae House Building Committee and the late Mr. Frank Jones, the Williamsburg decorator."

Mrs. Morris was also chairman of the first book committee and says further, "Another contribution made by Woman's College was that the late Dr. W. C. Smith, Dean of the College of Liberal Arts, made out a list of books that should be the first in any public library. These were the books we bought first and were excellent selections."

Miss Edith Clark has been the librarian in Salisbury since 1936. She took her library training at Woman's College and was the first trained librarian in Rowan County.

Having played such an important role in the building of the new library, Alumnae of Rowan County were particularly pleased that the first group to assemble in the meeting room, was Woman's College Alumnae for the Founder's Day Meeting October 5.

The new Rowan County Library symbolizes the service Woman's College is rendering to our State.

SCHOLARSHIP CONTRIBUTIONS

Contributions to the Scholarship Funds at Woman's College have been received recently from three chapters of Woman's College Alumnae, according to Mrs. Kathleen Hawkins, Student Aid Officer.

Alumnae in Gainesville, Florida, sent a gift of $18 from only a nine member chapter.

Mecklenberg County contributed $50 for a student from their county.

Durham County made a payment of $100 which was used to help pay off a loan made by a very outstanding student from Durham.

Chancellor Graham said recently: "I do not know of any gift which could be devoted to a finer purpose than that of helping a Woman's College girl bear the cost of her education, for it is in our students—the four years that they are with us and for all of the succeeding years that they are part of us—that the strength of the College lies."

The Rowan County Alumnae Chapter had thirty-one alumnae present at a meeting October 5 in the meeting room of the new Rowan County Public Library for the annual Founder's Day program.

Juanita (Kessler) Henry '20, president, called the meeting to order with words of welcome to those present. She thanked Emma Lewis (Speight) Morris '00, chairman of the Rowan Library Board of Trustees, for securing the library as a meeting place. Dedication and official opening of the library took place on October 4, and the Woman's College Alumnae meeting was the first to take place in its meeting room.

Minutes of the last meeting were read by Rose (Zimmerman) Post '48, secretary. The treasurer's report was given by Ellen Marsh '21, treasurer.

It was announced that the alumnae were invited to attend the Harriet Elliott Social Science Forum to take place on the Woman's College campus November 15, 16, 17.

The Alumnae from Mount Ulla were welcomed and Marian (McCraw) Miller '28, was thanked for securing a radio from Rustin's furniture store for the Founder's Day program.

A motion was made that a resolution expressing sympathy for the recent death of a former member, Eleanor (Watson) Andrews '00, be drawn up and sent to members of the family and the Alumnae News. Moffitt (Sinclair) Henderson '14, Emma Lewis (Speight) Morris '00, Evelyn (Roberts) Sowers '28, and Alice (Burton) Harris '25 were named on the committee to draw up the resolution. A minute of silent prayer was observed in memoriam of Mrs. Andrews.

The broadcast of the Founder's Day program underway in Aycock Auditorium was the highlight of the evening. Dr. Logan Wilson, vice president of the Consolidated University, was the chief speaker for the evening and took as his topic "The Importance of Women." Chancellor Edward K. Graham presided over the program, which included music by the college choir and the traditional Lithany of Commemoration led by Dr. W. C. Jackson.

Wake County

The Fall meeting of the Wake County Alumnae Chapter was a supper meeting at the S & W Cafeteria in Raleigh on Founder's Day, October 5, 1951.

Maribelle (Guin) Farlowe '42 presided and gave special recognition to the new members present, especially to the members of the class of '51. Their strong and sure voices helped the singing of the College Song. Having the Alumnae Association president, Virginia (Sloan) Swain '28, in our chapter is a special privilege. She gave the group news of the College and told us of the addition of two office workers to the Alumnae staff in November.

Committee chairmen were announced. Sarah (Hall) Jordan '40 discussed ways and means of raising the money for the Scholarship Fund. It was decided to sell Christmas cards which were on display and to make an all-out drive to get more members to join our county chapter. Emphasis would be placed on the dues going to the scholarship fund except for the few general expenses. Class chairmen will be appointed to make these contacts.

Mary (Cottrell) Griffin '38 announced the formation of new bridge clubs and a new book club. These groups are kept small, usually only two tables of bridge, and limited to only W. C. Alumnae. These members often seem the spark of our alumnae meetings by keeping alive W. C. contacts.

We were disappointed not to have the Founder's Day program come on at 8 p.m. as we had expected. However, the meeting was adjourned so some of us could get home to hear the transcription at 9 o'clock.

Lane Siler '43, Secretary.

Ring Around the World . . .

In the winter season of 1933 a gentleman walked into the "Dutch Mill" Restaurant on Miami Beach and ordered breakfast. On receipt of his bill the tourist discovered that he did not have enough money to pay for the breakfast. He left as security until his return a college ring. The stranger never returned to redeem the ring and it was given to the restaurant owner's son, Robert Carroll.

Mr. Carroll wore it until he outgrew it and then he placed in on his watch chain where it traveled with him around the world several times when he was in the maritime service and when he fought in the Pacific theater during World War II.

Minnie Grace (Morgan) Johnston, class of '27, and her NCCW ring which has traveled around the world.

Wilson County

The Wilson County Alumnae Chapter had a dinner meeting at Parker's Bar-be-que near Wilson October 5 for a Founder's Day celebration.

Yadkin County

The Yadkin County Alumnae Chapter met in Yadkinville, October 5, for a dinner meeting with eleven members present. The group listened to the Founder's Day program.

It was decided that the following officers would serve another year: Nina (Davis) Reece '19, president; Pauline (Hudspeth) Wood '40, secretary-treasurer.

Pauline (Hudspeth) Wood '40, Secretary.

Throughout these years it never occurred to him that he might find the owner of the ring. Not long ago he began to receive Alumni publications from Florida State University and then the idea came to him that the North Carolina College for Women, the name the ring bore, might have recorded information about the original owner whose initials were M. G. M. So he wrote the Woman's College Alumnae Association. A check of the files disclosed that M. G. M., '27, was Minnie Grace Johnston, nee Minnie Grace Morgan, living in Paducah, Kentucky.

The ring was Mrs. Johnston's. She told how in her senior year, soon after getting her ring, she took it off to wash her hands, left the ring on the lavatory and had not seen it since. At the time of its disappearance she had advertised for it and offered a reward, but to no avail. "It had been so long since I had seen it, I had almost forgotten I had ever had a class ring," says Mrs. Johnston.

The mystery of how the ring got from the Woman's College campus to the Miami "Dutch Mill" six years later will undoubtedly remain a mystery of the ages. If the ring could speak, what tales of adventure it could tell about its trips around the world, its maritime service and its war duties.

After graduation, Mrs. Johnston married, and moved to Paducah, Ky. They had just bought a new home, when her husband died after an emergency operation, on her seventh wedding anniversary, leaving her with small boys, six and two. Her mother came to live with them and Mrs. Johnston took over her husband's brokerage business which she has operated since that time.

The Alumnae Fund is not new. Provision for such a fund was written into the Constitution of the Alumnae Association years ago. Only lack of money prevented us from initiating at that time a planned program to insure the growth of our fund for the benefit of our College.

This year, underwritten by the University Development Office, we can do this. It is not a campaign for an immediate goal, but a long-range program of individual annual giving which will continue as long as the Alumnae of Woman's College believe in her future.

NECROLOGY

Mrs. E. F. McNeer (Maude Fields) died August 26, 1951, in Elkin.

Mrs. W. L. Gilbert (Lula B. Sessoms) died September 29, 1951, in Fayetteville.

1900

Mrs. T. Wingate Andrews (Eleanor Watson) died September 23, 1951 in Salisbury.

The following tribute to Mrs. Andrews was read at the Founders Day Meeting of the Rowan County Alumnae Chapter:

ELEANOR WATSON ANDREWS
1878—1951

One who never turned his back but marched breast forward.

Never doubted clouds would break,
Never dreamed, though right were worsted,
Wrong would triumph.
Held we fall to rise, are baffled to fight better,
Sleep to wake.

—Browning.

The death of Mrs. T. Wingate Andrews has brought widespread sorrow to the people of Salisbury and Rowan County, and to her many friends in other parts of the state. She lived a most active life and her contributions to the civic, educational, and religious life of this community were unique and outstanding. Hers was a life of service, for through the years she gave of herself unreservedly and unselfishly in the service of others. Her talents were many and she buried none of them. She was alert, active, and serving almost to the end.

Miss Eleanor, as she was affectionately known, is perhaps best remembered as a great and scholarly teacher. In the classroom she thrilled and inspired and influenced literally thousands of minds with her magnificent interpretations of poetry and instilled in them a deep love for the great masters of English literature. Constantly she sought and imparted an expression of life which would be beautiful, useful, and satisfying, enriching the lives of those whom she touched.

Miss Eleanor was so genuine, possessing rare charm and dignity, grace, beauty, and benevolence. These qualities alone would have made friends for her and held them, yet back of them was a mentality and strength of character that set her apart from the members of her sex and brought deserved recognition from all who knew her. She had an unusual sense of the cultural values of life and was deeply sensitive to the beauty and inner meaning of things. Beneath this culture lay strong personal convictions. Her ideals were high and she clung to them with firmness, never being swayed by social custom or expediency to forsake a belief or desert an ideal.

An inveterate reader, she found real joy in books which she delighted to share with friends, clubs, and other organizations. She was in demand as a speaker and her carefully prepared and beautifully presented club programs, especially those on Robert Browning, will always be a treasured memory.

As a public school teacher and principal, as a faithful worker in the First Presbyterian Church, as a devoted wife, as a member and officer of many organizations, as a loyal alumna of both the Woman's College in Greensboro and the University at Chapel Hill, she filled her place well during life's expanding demands in home, church, and community. The mere facts of her life are insignificant when compared with her manner of living and she is best remembered not by what she did but by what she was.

The members of the Rowan County Chapter of the Woman's College Alumnae Association consider it a privilege and an honor to be associated with her name and pause to give to her memory our abiding love.

Mae Sue Pegram died in Greensboro, October 11, 1951. We extend sympathy to her sister Dorothy Ray Pegram '37.

We Extend Deepest Sympathy:

To Annie (Kiser) Bost '03 in the death of her husband, Mr. W. T. Bost, September 13, 1951, in Raleigh. Mr. Bost's death came as a shock to all of North Carolina. He had been the Raleigh correspondent for the Greensboro Daily News for more than thirty years and for half a century was considered the dean of North Carolina's newsmen. Mr. Bost succumbed to complications which followed an attack of virus influenza. Tributes to his outstanding interpretation of State events, to his profound humaneness and deep religious conviction, to his integrity and his encyclopaedic mind, came from friends and readers all over the State. In the death of Mr. Tom Bost, the Woman's College and education throughout our State have lost a wonderful friend.
